THE REV. EDWARD ff. CLAYTON, M.A.

RECTOR OF LUDLOW,

THIS LITTLE VOLUME IS DEDICATED

AS A TOKEN OF

VERY SINCERE RESPECT.

TO

THE REV. EDWARD F. CLAYTON.

My dear Sir,

I am assured that in the noble Church of which you so worthily exercise the spiritual direction, or in anything which relates to it, no one can feel a greater interest than yourself. This church derived much of its importance from the Guild of Palmers, which seems to have exercised an authority over the building, that, with its other property, was transferred to the municipal corporation of the town. Thus, in the following records, any act of an extraordinary kind is usually done "by appointment of the Bailiffs." Hence, too, such of the papers relating to the former affairs of the church itself, as have been preserved, are mostly found in the municipal archives of the town. Among these, as you well know, is a large manuscript volume containing the churchwardens' accounts of Ludlow, from A.D. 1540, the thirty-second year of the reign of Henry VIII., to the close of the reign of Elizabeth. The greater part of these accounts I have printed in the present volume.

The accounts open at a very eventful period. We are at the dawn of the Reformation. Four years before, two hundred of the lesser monasteries had been dissolved, and in the very year in which our records commence the same fate fell upon the rest. During the remainder of this reign we witness in Ludlow Church the full exercise of the Romish service, with all its pomp and imagery; and the first two years of the reign of Edward VI. seem to have gone on much as usual; but the accounts of the two years which follow are filled with details of the pulling down and sale of images, and tabernacles, and other popish furniture. During Mary's reign we can just trace the return to the old forms of worship; but they are not brought forward forcibly to our attention, and it seems as though our old townsmen hesitated, uncertain of the durability of the new state of things, and unwilling to identify themselves with it. Then, during the reign of Elizabeth we can feel the tranquil triumph of Protestantism, until, at its close, we approach another age of troubles, destined to end in the temporary ascendancy of Puritanism.

Such is a general view of the historical interest of these records. In their more minute details we contemplate our church, and our town, as they existed three centuries ago. These accounts show the former, with most of its peculiarities, inside and outside; and the continual labour and expense employed in repairing, mending, whitewashing, adding to, is quite marvellous, so that the whole revenue of the Corporation is commonly spoken of as receipts for reparations. The frequency of some of these is remarkable; such as the mending of glass windows, the renewing and repairing of bells, and the purchase of bell-ropes. To judge from the wearing and breaking of bells and ropes, we must conclude that the amount of bell-ringing in Ludlow church during the sixteenth century was almost unparalleled. This, however, will admit of explanation. Not only was Ludlow, in itself, an important town on the borders of Wales, but it was the seat of a viceregal court, and no doubt whatever event caused excitement in the castle gave employment to the bells in the church.

In the same manner, some of the facts entered into these accounts, curious in themselves, reveal other facts no less interesting. Thus, the regular payment of a permanent officer employed to whip dogs out of the church—the dog-whipper—is remarkable as one of the almost forgotten characteristics of the olden time: but we are also led to conclude from it that the door of the church was in those times kept open daily during the whole day. I might point to other examples of this kind. It is not improbable that Ludlow Church had some customs and practices peculiar to itself. Among these, perhaps, were the regulations relating to the pews. It appears to have been the custom to grant to an individual a piece of ground measured out on the floor of the church, upon which he himself usually built his pew, which became his private property, and he could sell it, or leave it by will, or his heir inherited it. A part of the process of sale appears to have been a form of surrender of the pew to the parish. I have been told that this method of dealing with the pews has remained in Ludlow church down to a very recent period. We can hardly figure to ourselves the appearance the interior of the church must have presented, when the pews, separate from each other, of different forms and magnitudes, were scattered over it as described in the following accounts. The light thus thrown upon the early history of the pew system is very important, and I have ventured to repeat in an Appendix some remarks on this part of the subject which I had made on a former occasion in reference to our Ludlow records.

There is another point in which these accounts have a popular interest. They present us with the names of some of the leading

CHURCHWARDENS' ACCOUNTS

OF THE TOWN OF LUDLOW.

Reparaĉons done by Richard Langforde and Willyam Lacon, wardens of the pareshe churche off Ludlowe, anno Henrici octavi xxvij^to^, anno Domini 1540.[1]

Item, payd unto Thomas Smyth for a barre of yryn weynge vj. li. and for the workemanshype of the same ix d.
Item, payd unto Thomas Smythe for v. bordes to the same vij d.
Item, payd to Thomas Kerver for closynge the wyndous in the westrie with the same bordes . . . ix d.
Item, payd to master glasier for glassynge the wyndous in the vestrie . . . . . ij s. viij d.
Item, payd to the bellmon ffor yve and holye[2] at Chrystemas ij d.
Item, payd for the holye candylle[3] . . . . ij s. vj d.

[1] Henry VIII. ascended the throne of England on the 22nd of April, 1509, so that his thirty-second year began on the 22nd of April, 1540. The clerk who made up these accounts must, therefore, have written xxvij^to^ instead of xxxij^do^, in copying the account.

[2] The dressing of the churches at Christmas was a very ancient popular custom, and is often spoken of by the old writers. The ecclesiastical canons of the Western church, as far back as the seventh century, condemn it as a practice borrowed directly from the paganism of our primitive forefathers.

[3] This and the entries which follow refer to a custom which was observed with great solemnity in the Romish church at Easter. On Easter Eve they put out the old fires, and produced new fire from the flint, which was consecrated by the priest. People took home lights of this fire to renew the fires in their own houses, as carrying with it a sort of blessing to their homes (it was another relic of paganism). But chiefly they lighted from it an immense candle of wax, or taper, which was called the Paschal candle, and was consecrated with very great solemnity. This is told in the old Latin verses of Hospinian:—

Cereus hinc ingens, Paschalis dictus, amœno
Sacratur cantu; cui ne mysteria desint,
Thurea compingunt in facta foramina grana.

This was kept burning until Easter Day, when it was extinguished in the holy water, which was then renewed for the fortheoming year. The taper was generally very large, as will be seen by the entries in our churchwardens' accounts. In 1557, the Paschal taper for the abbey church of Westminster weighed three hundred pounds.

[1] i. e. altar.

[2] Crule, spelt in later times crewel, was a fine worsted thread, which was used of course for sewing on the rings.

Item, payd to Richard Spon for the peyntynge of the valans[1] . . . . . vj d.
Item, payd for a frynge that hangyt at the valans . xiiij d.

Item, payd for rynges and crule and the souynge on of them on the clothe on the mydys of the heygh chancelle iij d.

[1] The valance was the drapery raised over the high altar at the solemnity of Easter.

[2] There is in the MS. the mark over the e usually signifying the n to follow e; but, as this is sometimes used with no meaning in this Manuscript, I dare not resolve decidedly whether the word should be egle or engle.

[3] In the first of these examples the word is clearly written crofer, but probably the second is correct, cofer, in the sense of a chest. a cover ?

[4] A bar. [5] Pins. [6] ? Wire. [7] A coarse kind of tape.

Item, payd to Cle for mendynge of the locke on the organ-soler[1] dore . . . . . ij d.
Item, payd for cordes for the bellys off the organs . ij d. ob.
Item, payd for mendynge of ij. keys, on for the great dore, and the other for the wendynge dore[2] . . iiij d.
Item, payd to Moris Goodknappe for mendynge of a baud-rycke[3] . . . . . j d.
Item, payd to the organ bloere for his yeares wages . ij s. viij d.
Item, payd to the belmon for his yeares wages . xvj d.

Item, bought a roope for the cheymys[9] at xxx. fedome prys xvj d.
Item, payd for whyppynge of roopes . . . viij d.
Item, payd for whypcorde and leeure[10] for the same roopes . . . . . j d.

[1] The organ-soler was the floor on which the organ was raised. [2] ? Winding-door.
[3] This was a part of the mechanism of the bell, often mentioned in old churchwardens' accounts, the exact character of which is at present rather uncertain. Baldric, or baudric, means a belt or girdle, and it is said to have been given to a belt or thong by which the clapper of the bell was suspended.
[4] Pit seems to have meant a grave.
[5] The bier on which the dead were carried to their graves.
[6] To parget or rough-cast a wall. [7] Fathoms. [8] Mass bell.
[9] The chimes. [10] Liquor.

Item, payd for colis [1] agaynst Chrystmas, Ester, Whytsontyd, and Alhalontyd,[2] to sense with and to weeche the sepulcre [3] . . . . . iiij d.

[1] Coals, i. e. charcoal. [2] All Saints.

[3] It was the custom to construct a sepulchre, of course representing that of the Saviour, with various ceremonies; on Good Friday, the hoste was placed in it, and men were paid to watch it night and day until Easter day, in the morning of which the hoste was taken out, and it was announced that Christ had arisen.

[4] The singing-bread was the consecrated wafers.

[5] Fat, in old records, means usually a vat, or vessel; but it here signifies something which was bought by the pound, probably fat for the links or torches.

[6] The meaning of the word leystalle or laystalle in connection with a church is not very clear; but it appears to have had some relation to a pew. One meaning attached to the word is a place for cattle to rest in after a long journey.

[1] "Sir William" was of course the priest of St. Leonard's, a little chapel on the northern side of Corve Street, Ludlow, the ruins of which were visible at no very remote period. Sir, the English representative of dominus, was the usual title of a priest. How it happened to the priest of St. Leonard's to sell a "Pistille Boke," or book of the Epistles, to the church of Ludlow, is not very clear. Perhaps he had employed his leisure in writing it, and sold the MS. to the churchwardens.

[3] Ivy. The decking of churches and houses at Christmas with ivy and holly is a custom of great antiquity, and is spoken against with strong disapproval by the earlier ecclesiastics, as being derived from the pagans.

[4] The jury, of course, in the course of a law-suit here alluded to. A penny a man for treating them seems moderate, according to our present notions.

[1] The dogs appear, in those days, to have been kept under little restraint, and to have been very troublesome. From this necessity of driving them out of the church arose the title of dog-whipper, which is still given in some parts of England to the church-beadle. In the sixteenth century a similar title was given to the monk who had charge of the church in some of the continental monasteries.

[1] I have not been able to trace any property in Galford belonging to the church bearing, as we might expect, such a name as Shermon's Close; but it is very singular that there is a court in Galford, on the left-hand side going towards Cainham, which is called Charmer's Court, but which is understood to have derived its name from an old man named, or nicknamed, Dickey Charmer, who went about the town selling fish, &c. and was well known some years ago, and who lived in this court. May not the two names have been confounded, and the name of the Charmer of modern Ludlow have replaced the Shermon of these Churchwarden's Accounts? It is a sort of transformation which is met with not uncommonly in our old towns.

[1] The reading of this word is rather doubtful; perhaps it should be alleluias.

[2] The word to shot or to shut, is frequently applied to the bell ropes in the course of these accounts. It perhaps means to piece or mend them when broken. The word is sometimes used in the sense of to strengthen.

[3] yards?

[4] Wheel. This orthography is rather curious, as it would seem to show that the i was often pronounced as e. It is supposed that in Anglo-Saxon the vowels were pronounced as they are now in German and French, and in most of the continental languages, and that this continued to be the case in Old English down to a rather late date. The period of transition may have been as late as the beginning of the sixteenth century.

Item, of John Coxe for a volt that the saide image stode in . . . . . iijs. iiij d.

[1] It would hardly be possible at present to identify the exact site of the different chancels and chapels in our church mentioned in these entries. My friend Mr. R. Kyrke Penson, who is better acquainted with the history of the fabric of Ludlow church than anybody else I know, and whom I have consulted on this subject, informs me that "the only point about which there appears to be any certainty is that the Lady Chapel was on the south of the church. No one has been able to make out where St. George stood. There were chapels at intervals, as is evident from the existing piscinas, down the north and south aisles, and possibly St. George and St. Margaret may have stood in them. Beawpy's chapel is a puzzle, because the two church aisles which might be called chapels are known to be St. John's and the Lady Chapel."

[1] I have not met with this word in any sense which could be accepted here. Tonnycle is given in the Promptorium Parvulorum as the English name for one of the ecclesiastical vestments. Perhaps it is here merely the diminutive of tonne, or tunne, explained in the Promptorium by the Latin dolium.

[2] The word here appears evidently to mean making a pentice.

[1] The exact spelling of this word is a little doubtful in the manuscript.

[2] This must be Richard Sampson Bishop of Lichfield, who had held the high office of Lord President of Wales and the Marches from 1543 to 1548, when on the accession of Edward VI. he was removed, but he was perhaps temporarily restored on the accession of Mary.

[3] Another hand has written over the line "Ph'," i. e. Philippus. The marriage of Queen Mary with Philip of Spain took place on the 25th of July, 1554, with which day, which was now called the first day "of the first and second year of the reign of Philip and Mary," began the new regnal year, which will be found at the head of the present churchwardens' year.

[1] Hair-cloth.

[2] Dornik, or Doornick, is the Flemish name for the town which the French and English call Tournay, where formerly a flourishing trade was carried on in linen manufactured there. The alb here mentioned was no doubt made of Tournay linen. At this time, for several reasons, an extensive trade was carried on between our country and Flanders.

[1] The wedding door has been frequently mentioned in these accounts. Before the Reformation, important parts of the Services of baptism, matrimony, and the churching of women, were performed at the church door, usually in the porch. The reader of Chaucer will remember what he says (Cant. T. l. 462) of the Wife of Bath,— "Housbondes atte chirche dore hadde sche fyfe."

It is for this reason, no doubt, that we find holy-water stoups so commonly in old porches of churches. It was directed in the will of Henry VI. that there should be "in the south side of the body of the church of Eton College a fair large dore with a porche, and the same for christeninges of children and weddinges." At the southern entrance of Norwich Cathedral, there is a representation of the Sacrament of marriage carved in stone. The custom was that the parties did not enter the church till that part of the office when the minister now goes up to the altar and repeats the Psalm. Part of the ceremony under the porch consisted also in the endowing of the bride, which was called dos ad ostium eccle-

sic. The door at which the wedding was performed appears to have been generally on the southern side of the church, but at Ludlow it was evidently not the porch, and, from an entry a few lines further on, it would appear to have been on the north side.

[1] Allusions to this custom have occurred before. See p. 15. It may be remarked that this office was not confined to England, and it appears to have been of some antiquity. It is mentioned in the "Contes d'Eutrapel," by the well known French satirical writer of the sixteenth century, Noel du Fail, who, in one of his facetious stories, the scene of which lay in a monastery, says, "survient un quidam enfroqué, ayant la charge d'éteindre les chandelles et chasser les chiens hors d'église." (Contes d'Eutrapel, Conte xx.) The dog-whipper here was a monk, enfroqué.

II. Remarks on the History of Pews as illustrated by the Ludlow Churchwardens' Accounts, with extracts from the Churchwardens' Accounts of St. Michael, Cornhill, in London.

The history of pews, which is curious and interesting in more points than one, has been hitherto very obscure, or rather it has been made obscure by the circumstance that it has usually been treated by writers who were only slightly acquainted with the documentary materials for it. At the Congress of the British Archæological Association at Ludlow in 1867, I laid the manuscript of the Churchwardens' Accounts of Ludlow, here printed, before the meeting, and I called attention to their extreme importance in throwing light upon this question. These remarks were embodied in a paper

[1] The hour-glass. This is rather an interesting entry, for the use of the hour-glass in churches is not to be traced further back than about this time. The frame of the hour-glass was usually attached to the pulpit, or to the wall close by it, and some good examples are still found remaining in our country churches.

[2] The accounts for the year 1598 to 1599 appear never to have been entered in the book, and a leaf of the manuscript is left blank.

which was soon afterwards published in the Journal of the British Archæological Association. I repeat them here with slight alteration.

The early history of pews is, as just remarked, obscure, and the accounts usually given are repeated by one writer from another, and are extremely confused and inaccurate. In Dr. Hook's valuable work the Church Dictionary we are told that "Pews, according to modern use and idea, were not known till long after the Reformation. Inclosed pews were not in general use before the middle of the seventeenth century; they were for a long time confined to the family of the patron." The churchwardens' accounts of the town of Ludlow are quite sufficient to show the inaccuracy of this statement. But I find other isolated proofs of the antiquity of the use of the pew. In the English Mort d'Arthure of Sir Thomas Malory, printed by Caxton, Sir Galahad, one of the purest of the heroes, who is destined to be the discoverer of the St. Grael, arrives at the monastery in which King Evelake, the companion of Joseph of Arimathea in his visit to Britain, and who had been condemned to live three hundred years, was residing as a monk. 'And," says the text, "on the morn he heard his masse, and in the monastery he fonde a preeste redy at the aulter. And on the ryght syde he sawe a pewe closyd with yron." This, no doubt, was not only a pew, but a closed pew. But we can go considerably further back even than this. The celebrated poem of the Vision of Piers Ploughman was no doubt composed about the year 1360, and its different texts, which vary considerably, belong all to a period extending not much beyond the middle of the second half of the fourteenth century. In the text represented by Whitaker's edition (p. 95), Wrath, in his confession, says that he was accustomed "to sit among wives and widows shut up in pews," and adds that this was a fact well known to the parson of the parish—

> "Among wyves and wodewes
> Ich am ywoned sute
> Yparroked in puwes,
> The parson him knoweth." [1]

[1] The MS. Cotton. Vespas. B. xvi. which gives the same text as Whitaker, reads sitte

The verb parroken, derived from the word parrok, a park, means in its primary sense, to enpark, or inclose like a park, but it was used more generally in the signification of to inclose, or close up. In another part of the poem, in the text represented by my own edition (p. 312), Paul the Hermit is said to have shut himself up in a hermitage —

> " Paul primus heremita
> Had parroked hymselve,
> That no man myghte hym se
> For mosse and for leves."

The well-known mediæval dictionary, the Promptorium Parvulorum, defines the word, " PARROKKYN, or speryn in streyte place," which is, in another MS. expressed by " closyn in straythly," that is, in a narrow place. Under the other word, we have, in the Promptorium—

> " SPERYN, or schettyn. Claudo.
> SPERYN, and close withein (closyn in, MS. K). Includo.
> SPERYN, and schette wythe lokkys. Sero, obsero."

Nobody will surely deny that these early pews were closed in, and no doubt locked. It is curious, too, to remark, in illustration of the passage of Piers Ploughman, how often in the Ludlow churchwardens' accounts the possessors of pews are " wives and widows."

I am inclined to think that the word pew itself is not of foreign origin, but that it has been originally a word of popular growth, and it appears not to have been in use as belonging to correct literature until rather a late date. I have in vain sought through all the dictionaries, English and Latin, or English and other languages, till towards the latter part of the sixteenth century; and yet in the fourteenth century, when Piers Ploughman was written, and, in 1485, when the Mort d'Arthure was printed, it must have been well known. It was evidently an obscure word with our early etymologists, who are represented by Junius and Skinner, and whose explanations are very far from satisfactory. They fancied it to be derived from the Latin podium, and this notion appears ever since and pues : sute is, of course, only another form of sitte, if it be not a mere error of Whitaker's, who was very incorrect in whatever he did.

to have been accepted as a fact without question or inquiry. But there are two objections to this piece of etymology which appear to me very serious. In the first place, the Latin word podium never meant a pew ; in the second place, any one acquainted with mediæval philology knows that the word cannot have come from the Latin into English in this form, except through the Romane dialects, either Norman or French, and there does not appear ever to have existed in them any such word with such a meaning. It is true that worthy old Minshewe derives it in rather an indirect manner, for he says the pew was called podium, because it stretches out like a foot, quod ad pedis modum extentet, but it is an explanation which appears to me not very clear.

In pure Latin, according to Ainsworth, the word podium had two meanings—1, an open gallery, a balcony or building jutting out ; 2 (technical), that part of the theatre near the orchestra. In mediæval Latin, according to Ducange, the word had three meanings, of which the first was a support or prop of any kind, anything on which one leans, as a staff, crutch, or walking-stick; applied also to the part of the form on which the monks leaned in kneeling to prayer. From a debased form of this word, appodiamentum, were derived the French words appui and appuyer. The second meaning given by Ducange is a balcony, taken, of course, from the pure Latin. The third and only other mediæval meaning of the word was a hill, represented by the French puy, still represented in names of mountains, as the Puy-de-Dome in Auvergne, with a variety of dialectic forms, as pou, pec, pic, etc. We have thus the Pec de St. Germain en Laye, the Pou de Flamanville in Normandy, and the well-known Pic de Teneriffe. It is here represented by the English peak.

Our old etymologists quote derivatives from the Latin word, which they pretend are identical with our English pew, but not one of them will bear any examination. As I have said, there is no such word in French. They point to puye and puyde in Flemish and Dutch: but in the first of these languages the word meant only a support ; and in the Dutch dictionary of Hexam, printed in 1678, I find it defined, "Puye, a pue or place elevated in a market, to proclaim or cry anything," which is no doubt an adaptation of the old meaning of a balcony. Another Dutch dictionary explains it as signifying "the front of a house, a place from which proclamations are read." The old etymologists appeal also to the Italian poggio, which is no doubt derived from podium, but they were quite unacquainted with its true meaning. Florio explains it, "Poggio, a hill, a block to get on horseback;" and he gives as a diminutive, "Poggiuolo, a hillock, a horseblock, a leaning place."

It seems to me evident, from the reasons I have adduced, that our English word pew is not derived from the Latin podium, but that it is an old popular English word, the derivation of which, as in so many similar cases, has been long forgotten.

Since the foregoing notes were written, I am enabled, through the kindness of a City friend, A. J. Waterlow, Esq., to add to it a number of extracts relating to pews from a still existing series of early churchwardens' accounts, belonging to the parish of St. Michael, Cornhill, London. These accounts begin with the year 1456, the 35th of the reign of King Henry VI. and are continued without interruption down to the year 1475, the 14th of Edward IV., so that they are much older than the allusion in the Mort d'Arthure. There is then a long lacuna, and the accounts are deficient until 1548, which was the first year of the reign of Edward VI. I will only remark further, that, like those of Ludlow, they give us very valuable information on the character of the pews,[1] and it is highly interesting to have to compare together two series of accounts from such widely distant parts of the kingdom.

[1] There can be no doubt that the use of pews in churches was quite common during the fifteenth century. Just as I am correcting this sheet for the press, I open the "Testamenta Vetusta," and find, at p. 266, a will of William Bruges, the first Garter King of Arms, dated at London, Feb. 26, 1449, by which he leaves, among other things to the church of Stanford, money to complete the fabric,—"that is to be understand, in coveryng with lede, glassyng, and makyng of pleyne desques, and of a pleyn rodelofte, and in puyng of the seyd chirch, nourt curiously, but pleynly, and in pavyng the hole chirch," &c. Again, at p. 289 of the same volume, we have the will of John Younge, of Herne, dated May 26, 1458, who also left money "to the fabrick of the church of Herne, viz. to make seats called puinge, x. marks, so that the same be done within two years after my decease."
